United States Saddlebag Preachers

Circuit Riders

from south of the border in Vermont, New Hampshire, Northern New York, Upstate New York who ministered from the 1790's onwards in Brome, Chateauguay, Huntingdon, Missisquoi, Richelieu River Valley, Richmond, Shefford, Sherbrooke, Stanstead.

The Methodist circuit rider often travelled as many as forty or fifty miles between appointments, enduring hardships that now seem incredible. Travelling in all manner of weather through forests and fording streams and rivers, these riders frequently carried their few worldly possessions in saddle-bags. When they finally arrived at a community, the place of worship was often a house, a barn, a school - and in rare cases, a church. Many a circuit rider was responsible for the religious welfare of communities scattered throughout hundreds of square miles of territory.
