>> Mégantic County – The story of the Scottish and Irish pioneers who settled these Appalachian highlands from the 1820's onward - Evicted from their farms in the Scottish Hebrides, or fleeing famine in Ireland, they carved homesteads out of the bush, founding communities like Inverness, Leeds, Kinnear's Mills, Adderley and Maple Grove. And then, gradually, they moved away, leaving a legacy of clapboard churches, hillside cemeteries and abandoned farms. The preceding is a short excerpt only - Full text by Marian Scott available on

<http://www.montrealgazette.com/travel/> - An article entitled Au coeur du Québec, the soul of the Celts, published by the Montreal Gazette on July 19, 2009, available on the internet. In the 1847-1855 time-frame, both Mégantic and Lotbinière experienced a substantial influx of Irish immigrants. In 1831 the population of Mégantic County totaled 2200 individuals, 85% Protestants, 9% Irish Catholics, 6% French Catholics. Unfortunately, some of the regions of Mégantic and Lotbinière were not ideal locations for farming, the soil was poor and rocky, many of the farms were settled on hilly fields, definitely not a suitable solution for modern-day farming practices, which resulted in a migration within two generations to more fertile and larger farms in other parts of Canada and the U.S.A.

>> Missisquoi County – The first migrants arrived in Missisquoi Bay in the 1770's and 1780's, mainly from New York's upper Hudson and Mohawk River Valleys. They settled in towns such as Dunham, Stanbridge, Bedford, Pigeon Hill, Noyan, Cowansville, Philipsburg, St-Armand, Freligsburg among others. As early as 1847, a few Irish Catholic families had settled the county. Bounded entirely to the south by the American border, to the east by Brome County and to the northwest by Rouville County and to the west by Iberville County and the Richelieu River – The county of St-Jean is on the other side of the Richelieu River – The northernmost point of the county is also the junction of the borders of Missisquoi, Rouville, Iberville counties – The westernmost point of the county is on the Richelieu River – The county is divided into four townships; Farnham in the north, Dunham in the east, Stanbridge in the west and Saint Armand along the US border - Missisquoi Bay on Lake Champlain was a haven for refugees during the American Revolution. In the 1770's and 1780's they came by the thousands into Québec, mainly from New York's upper Hudson River and Mohawk River valleys. These migrants reached British soil near a traditional Abenaki Indian village on the mouth of the Missisquoi River, the district then forming a largely unpopulated seigneurie called St. Armand. Many of these frontiersmen were Empire Loyalist soldiers whose properties were seized during the war and who were expelled from the new United States. As compensation, they asked Canada's colonial government to grant them title to lands north of the border. The American exodus continued northward along the Richelieu and the St. Lawrence rivers, but a number of families stayed where they'd landed, clearing fields and putting down roots along the fertile shores of the bay. Missisquoi settlers felled trees and shaped crude timber for their cabins with broad axes. They formed a core group of early pioneers who led the push to bring Quebec's Eastern Townships under the plow. As log cabins gave way to farmhouses, lonesome millsites in Missisquoi County sprouted into bustling towns, attracting British and later, French Canadian colonists.

>> Stanstead County – People from Derby Line in Orleans County, Vermont and Stanstead of the same county-name in Québec have been sharing a common border since the American Revolution. People of these two counties have been inter-marrying, some family members were married in one country, had their children baptized into the other and were buried on both side of the border. Many of the British, Scottish, American, Irish and French communities of this region have family members on both side of the border. The area was also known as a crossing point for families who had decided to establish a permanent residence in the U.S.A., and such was the case for thousands of Irish families in the 1800's and early 1900's. From 1793, settlements were established on the eastern shores of Lake Memphremagog at Judd's Point, Magog Outlet, Georgeville, Lake Shore, Stanstead Plain, Rock Island, East Hatley, in addition to Bolton and Potton, on it's western shores. – From 1802, Barford, Stanstead Village, Hatley, Barnston were added – At a later time period the county was divided into: Stanstead South, Stanstead East, Stanstead Southeast, Stanstead

North East and as such, certain church documents will contain these descriptive regions of the county

Upper Richelieu Valley

<https://archivescanada.accesstomemory.ca/missisquoi-baie-le-haut-richelieu-quebec>

The Richelieu Valley was one of the first regions to be settled under the French Regime. It includes Chambly (1665) and Sorel (1670) in addition to smaller villages along the Richelieu River.

Some of the first settlers were former soldiers of the various French regiments who had been stationed along the banks of this crucial river between Lake Champlain and the St. Lawrence River. The majority of these former French soldiers became farmers of the region.

Under the British Regime, the Anglicans (Episcopalians) established a mission at Fort St. John's in 1781, a British fort, and again former soldiers of various British regiments settled in the region. Most of the latter group became farmers.

The Richelieu River has always been an important transportation and commercial trading link between the USA to the south and the St. Lawrence River to the north. In 1818, the Government of Lower Canada gave permission for the building of the Chambly Canal. From 1831 to 1843, hundreds of Irish workers helped in the construction of the canal and many of them settled in communities along the Richelieu. Many of the descendants of these Irish workers settled on farms throughout the region
